Tobacco Tip
from Barry Levin

If you like the characteristics of a sliced flake tobacco, there's an easier way to rub it out than by hand! Chop all or part of the tin's contents in an electric food processor using a sharp blade. After a few seconds, the tobacco will reach an excellent smoking consistency, perfect for easy loading and slow, even burning. Fresh out of the tin, all McClelland Personal Reserve flake cut tobaccos have the ideal moisture content for this treatment.

McClelland: A Tradition of Excellence

We use only the highest grades of leaf to create McClelland Personal Reserve Series tobaccos, and work with small batch sizes to maintain strict quality control. Hand processing is combined with specially designed machinery.

We take great care in the various maturing processes required for our different types of tobaccos, as aging mellows our tobaccos and develops their rich depth of flavor, color and aroma.

Our tobaccos are fully matured before tinning, and are perfect for immediate use, however, with the growing interest in aging tobaccos, we also date-code tins to assist you in further aging these fine matured tobaccos, just as a connoisseur might age fine wine.

We occasionally meet someone whose familiarity with tobacco, sensitive palate, and desire for a special taste provides inspiration for us. Such tobaccos become Personal Reserve blends.
